

Tips To Make The Most Of your E-Mail

- Obtain A Separate, Job Search Only, E-mail Account—Use this e-mail address on your résumés, contacts and prospective employers. Do not give this out to your friends and family or your favorite on-line shopping sites.
- Use An Appropriate E-mail Address—Employers will be turned off by inappropriate or cutesy email address. Make sure your email address shows who you are and it is professional. For example, RobertAnderson@abc123.com will be taken more seriously than bigman@abc123.com.
- Check Your E-mail Regularly—Do not miss an e-mail that an employer has sent you. Check it 2-3 times daily.
- Always Respond Promptly—Make sure that you respond to all e-mail with-in 24 hours. Do this even if only to say that you received the original e-mail and will need more time to do what is requested.
- Utilize The Subject Line—The subject line is the first thing a person sees when checking e-mail. Keep in mind that the person you are e-mailing may receive dozens of e-mails daily. When short on time, he/she will scan the subject lines and answer the ones that seem most important first.
- Spelling And Grammar Rules Still Apply—Poor spelling and grammar make you appear at best careless and at worst poorly educated. Neither characterization is appealing when worn by the job seeker. Read over and spell-check each e-mail before sending it.
- Keep It Short And Sweet—Make your point using the least number of words reasonably possible. Remember your target audience is often short on time. If they open up your e-mail and it looks like an essay, they may become frustrated and not bother to read it at all.
- Forget Being Cute—Never forget that you are looking for a job. Save the smiley faces, colored fonts, etc. for your friends and family. E-mails may be informal business communication, but do not throw all rules of etiquette out the window and be courteous in your writing.
- Your Sign-Off—Close each e-mail with a proper sign-off. It may be as simple as “Thanks-Jeff Smith”. It is often useful to include contact information as well as any certifications in your sign-off. Many e-mail services have an auto signature function that allows you to set up a customized sign-off that can be inserted at the end of your e-mail.
